

Our Differences Are Our
Strengths

What does the word 'inclusive' mean?

Today, our assembly is about something very important:

Being kind, being respectful, accepting others and understanding that every person and every family is unique.

You may have seen symbols like this before.

The colours represent a way of describing the way one person can love another person.

It is about people being themselves.

No two families are exactly the same.

“I’m just me.”

The Rainbow Scouts were a children who loved exploring. Each scout wore a badge representing something special about them – kindness, curiosity, bravery.

One day, a new scout named Alex joined. Some scouts were unsure whether Alex was a boy or a girl. Alex said, “I’m just me.” The scouts realised that what mattered wasn’t labels – it was being a good friend.

Power of Words

A new pupil arrives in Year 5 named Alex. Others in the class are unsure if Alex is a boy or a girl. Alex responds by telling them, “I’m just me.”

How could Alex’s
classmates respond,
making sure they demonstrate our values of friendship, tolerance and respect?

Our Differences Are Our Strengths